This note is the second (and hopefully final) part of our mass email test. We sent a copy of this note to all Ready2Roll Cycling riders at 6:15 am today. This second copy is being sent to all of you very gradually, over a three-hour period.

When you get this note please follow these very simple steps:

1. Check your inbox about 6:15 am for another copy of this same note (same subject line)
2. If there is not another copy of the note in your inbox, send us a reply to this note - don't type anything, just reply and send.
3. If there are two copies of the note in your inbox, please DO NOT reply.

That's it - this will help us understand what may be causing some of you to not receive the email when it goes out to all our riders at the same time.

OK, if you didn't get the ride details earlier, here they are...

Good morning! It's Wednesday which means it's time for the Ready2Roll Cycling weekly ride note. I know many of you are very busy so let's get right to the ride details...

...but first, the same old story - the weather...

...actually, when it comes to the weather, we have some VERY exciting news...

Breaking News!

Ready2Roll Cycling is excited to announce a partnership with KNOX II as the Exclusive Weather Partner of Ready2Roll Cycling. David Neal, Chief Meteorologist for KNOX II, will be furnishing Ready2Roll Cycling specific weather forecasts for the weekly, fully-supported, Ready2Roll Cycling training ride.

The forecasts will be communicated to our riders, volunteers and other supporters via a
