

Marshall, Jan, Robbie and I want to welcome you to Ready2Roll Cycling or, for many of you, welcome back!

We are so appreciative that over the next four months you have committed to sharing your Saturday's with us. Typically, after a long week, we know your Saturday mornings are precious and very important to you. It is our objective to make the time extremely well spent and the experience over-the-top. You can expect an excellent training series that will help you get in better shape, focus on rider safety and courtesiveness, while showcasing some of the best cycling routes in our area.

As we get ready to start the 2019 training series, we do want to touch on some key points that set Ready2Roll Cycling apart – volunteers, community relations, and safety.

To be able to deliver an exceptional riding experience each and every week takes many incredible volunteers. Believe it or not, that number typically exceeds 70 amazing people each Saturday. We do have a core group of a few awesome friends/family that give up their time to help with vital roles each week, but the need for help is far greater. Without the required volunteers each week, we couldn't provide this training series so we thank you in advance for your commitment to helping support the series. We hope you too will share in the philosophy that if each of us does just a little bit of giving-back by volunteering, we will have ample volunteers and the series will proceed seamlessly. It is the only way we can have a training series and have so much fun along the way. We thank you in advance for volunteering!
